

Anderson support low at Clarke

By Jill Hickey
Editor

The Anderson for President committee in Dubuque is looking for help from college students, according to Audrey Mortenson, committee co-chairman.

Mortenson noted that there are several supporters already helping, but the committee needs people to volunteer for part-time hours at their new office at 1036 Main.

But Jeff Henderson, a University of Dubuque senior and coordinator of the Anderson campaign on Dubuque's college campuses, is finding student help "hard to come by."

"We have several students at the U. who are actively involved," he explained, "but I only have two names from Loras and I have recently lost my Clarke contact because he doesn't have the time."

Nevertheless, Henderson is confident that if he could establish a few contacts on all three campuses, "students will begin to follow them."

Yet, of ten randomly-selected students, none were in favor of helping out with Anderson's campaign on Clarke's campus, or in the Anderson headquarters. And, at a recent organizational meeting, only two students attended.

The reason given most often was "lack of time." Many students also refused because of their "lack of knowledge of Anderson," and several were uncommitted to any candidate for the same reason.

Mike Nester, a freshman, plans to vote in November, but is not sure who he will vote for. "I am eager to see him (Anderson) debate Reagan and Carter — to compare all three simultaneously," he said.

Senior Melanie Richardi is strongly opposed to Anderson, but would like to see him in the debates. Richardi feels that Anderson is actually "inept to be president," but that people will vote for him "because he is not Reagan or Carter."

Richardi has registered to vote, but does not plan on voting because "none of the candidates is better than the next," she said.

Ellen Henderson, a junior, agrees with Richardi and is also unsure whether she'll vote. "I don't really know enough about any of the candidates," she said, "so I'd rather not vote than hurt either party."

Jeff Henderson (no relation) sees this "apathy" as a major problem with students. "Our main goal is to get every student registered to vote," he said. "Hopefully, they will eventually vote for Anderson, but it is equally important that they at least vote."

He feels that young people are attracted to Anderson, and once they understand the issues, he will gain supporters.

Tracey Williams, a Clarke freshman, agrees with Henderson and added that Anderson's "local status is also a plus in this area."

Donna Fleming, also a freshman, is unsure of who she will vote for, but is interested in knowing more about Anderson. She does not feel that Anderson will win, however.

In fact, of the ten people polled, only two thought Anderson "had a chance." The others generally thought that he will affect the eventual outcome of Carter and Reagan, because he is taking away votes from both parties.

Jeff Henderson remains confident that once supporters grow in number, they will also grow in strength to prove why we really need Anderson."

Homecoming plans strive for more harmonious results

Homecoming will be the weekend of October 10. This year's theme is "Clarke-Loras: The Winning Ticket."

Revisions have been made in the traditional Clarke-Loras Homecoming. Unlike last year, Clarke will not be participating in the Queen Competition, which usually consists of three Loras girls and three Clarke girls. Clarke will be building two of their own floats this year on their own campus. These changes are due to a vote taken last year by the CSA Executive Council.

When asked why the vote was made, Sharon Lundy, CSA vice president, stated, "The changes were made to improve relations between the two schools. There were too many bad feelings."

Mary Pat Rielly, CSA president, added, "There are more students to participate in building the floats this year."

Other revisions include continuous music throughout the dinner dance Saturday evening. Bob Kaliban, Loras Class of '55, will be the feature entertainer. Music will be provided by "Paul Hemmer" and "Fanfare."

This year the alumni will hold the reunion at the Julien Ballroom instead of separate rooms at the Julien Inn. Saturday afternoon the annual Clarke Reunion Caucus (luncheon) will be basically the same as last year, with the exception of a second Distinguished Alumni Award. The rest of the weekend's activities will follow a similar pattern as they did last year.

Hayek to lead freshman class

The first male class president was elected at Clarke last week, to the Freshman class. Hal Hayek of Cedar Rapids, defeated Gina Sortonni for the position.

He feels "challenged by the job and excited about it." "I am going to enjoy it and it will give us an opportunity to show that a situation like this will work out," he said.

Hayek will be assisted by Jennifer Collins, vice president; Tracey Williams, secretary; Janine Bellmann, treasurer, and Karen Barber, social board representative.

Representatives to Phoenix, Cultural Events, Educational Policy and RAP committees were also elected. These include: Sue Beckman, Heidi Arzbaeher, Joan Lingen, and Roxanne Janssen, respectively.

Clarke loses opener

In its first season of varsity play, the Clarke Volleyball team opened its 1980-81 season Thursday, Sept. 11 with a game against Luther College. The team was unable to pull off a victory in any of the three matches.

When the season started, the team had only three players. Now the team consists of nine, with Sharon Green as team captain and Carol Crock as co-captain.

Fourteen games and one tournament are scheduled for the season. The first home game was Tuesday, Sept. 16 against St. Ambrose, followed by a game Thursday at the University of Dubuque. When freshman player Janine Bellman was asked about the team and their playing, she commented, "The outlook is good."

The next home game is Tuesday, Sept. 23 against Loras.

Carter supporters won't let go

By Yvonne Yoerger

Democratic district and state convention delegates from Clarke who pledged themselves to President Jimmy Carter last year are sticking with him to the end of the campaign, but they admit their support is weakening.

"I'll probably still vote for him," said sophomore Ann Rielly, "but I have trouble defending his policies anymore."

Rielly, who attended the district and state conventions as a Carter delegate, said Carter's handling of specific issues has hurt him most since last year. She said people are dissatisfied about the grain embargo and draft registration, but the economy is still the top concern. Rielly said issues like registration and the embargo can be traced directly to Carter, but the country's economic situation is not his fault alone.

"We can't blame the economy on Carter. It's too much and too complicated for one person to have control over," she said.

Junior Lisa Freese, a district delegate, agreed. "Carter's handling of domestic issues

"In the end, yes, I'll vote for Carter. But I'm not getting out to actively support him." —Farrell isn't always the best, but most people don't realize the complexities of things like the economy, and that one man can't do much one way or the other." Freese also said she will vote for the President, but that, "it's getting difficult to support him."

Those feelings were echoed by Sister Carolyn Farrell, Continuing Education director, who was a district Carter delegate. "In the end, yes, I'll vote for Carter. But I'm not getting out to actively support him."

Farrell said Senator Edward Kennedy's influence at the national party convention won some Carter delegates over to his side and changed the party platform structure, but in the end, "Carter won out." She said the Kennedy-Carter split was good because it forced both candidates to justify their positions on issues.

"Kennedy has the family charisma," Farrell said. "He was at his best during the convention, but I think Carter picked up more on the needs of the common man." Farrell said Carter had to get down to those needs because Kennedy seemed to rely on his charismatic appeal only.

Rielly said she didn't think Kennedy had much influence over Carter delegates at the convention, at least not the Iowa people. She admits that the two candidates "didn't work together too well," but the concessions that were made in the platform strengthened it.

Freese said she couldn't estimate how much effect Kennedy really did have. "Kennedy stole the show. There's no doubt about that," she said, "but the media played up the split so much it's hard to say how much of it was real."

Independent candidate John Anderson will take more votes from Carter than his position on any single issue, according to Freese. She said people aren't happy with Carter, but they don't want to turn to Ronald Reagan, "so Anderson is the only one left." Freese, who is a team field staffer for the Iowa State Democratic Party, says many voters who were originally for Carter are going through the same indecisiveness she is experiencing.

Rielly said people she has talked to feel the same way. "Many of them have the same problem I do about being able to defend Carter. They've toned down a lot. Most people will say, 'I'm still supporting him, but not as strongly.'"

TELETHON

Telethon in progress

Clarke College started its annual coast-to-coast alumni fundraising telethon Sept. 15-18, to run through September 22-25.

Last year's telethon, the first in which Clarke's 5,100 living alumni were called from a central location on campus, netted $113,899, a 75 per cent increase over the 1978-79 total of $65,099.

About 40 per cent of all Clarke alumni gave to the college, an unheard-of figure in college fundraising that ranked Clarke above schools such as Harvard, Yale and Loyola in alumni participation.

This year's goal is $135,000. Like last year, five-member teams of Clarke faculty, staff, students, administrators, trustees and alumni will call practically every Clarke alumna in all 50 states.

Pandemonium will prevail as gongs, bells and tote boards keep track of competition between the teams.

Clarke's board of trustees has agreed to match all new and increased gifts. Alumni who give for the first time or increase last year's gift will have the new or increased amount doubled.

Of the $135,000, $15,000 will be used for Clarke's new nursing laboratory, $15,000 will be used to install new seating in Terence Donaghoe Hall, $75,000 will be used for student scholarships and $30,000 will go to general college needs.

Hypnotist Edwin Baron performed at Clarke last week. His show required volunteers who were made to perform various stunts. These included laughing at an apparently non-existent movie and beating off the villain in a more dramatic movie. Among the participants were junior Pam Kambach, sophomore Allison Barnes, and freshman Sue Rabidu.

'Midsummer' cast chosen

The production season of the Clarke Drama Department will open Oct. 31 with the play, "A Midsummer Night's Dream," written by William Shakespeare.

The production is under the direction of Sister Carol Blitgen, department chairman, and junior Anna Stefaniak, assistant director for the play.

Clarke students in the cast include: Mike Allen, Kim Pinneke, Gladys Koepferich, Monica Nease, and Mimi Smelcer. The parts as fairies and members of the duke's court will be played by Clarke students, while most of the male roles will be played by members of the Dubuque community.

COMMENT

Food service observes waste

Food service employees frequently hear complaints from students about the long lines at meal times, the quantity of food portions, and other aspects of Clarke's food service.

"First come, first served" is a rule applied when buying concert tickets, shopping at a sale, and numerous other experiences in life including being served in the Clarke Cafeteria.

Like other rules this one is also frequently broken. It is broken by students who feel they are special and skip to the front of the serving line. In the past these students have been served without question. Complaints about these students were made to food service employees and with the increase of complaints, came action. These people will no longer be served unless they wait like everyone else.

Action is frequently taken when students have legitimate complaints about the food service, but this is not the case when the food service management has complaints about the actions of the students.

Approximately 20% of the food served daily is wasted, according to Larry James, food service manager. This waste ranges from the main entrees to beverages. Wasting this food is like buying clothes too small hoping to diet into them. What is the point of spending money on something you don't use?

The waste may not affect the quality or quantity of food now, but with the continued food waste comes continued money waste, which eventually will have an effect on future food service.

The Courier encourages students to help the survival of pleasant cafeteria surroundings so that drastic measures do not have to be taken. If waiting in lines does not please you, go to meals during the less-populated times. Take smaller food portions when you find you are continuously throwing leftovers away.

The food service listens to gripes every day. Please take the time to listen to theirs.

In the September 5th issue of the Courier, a front-page feature article listed enrollment increases. Although Continuing Education programs were included as contributing to the figures, there was no further elaboration about CE students in the article. Actually, of the 817 students currently enrolled at Clarke, over 275 are CE students (defined as those students 24 years of age or older, and/or part-time, as well as students enrolled in the Tri-College B.A. program). Since so many Continuing Education students are presently on campus, it would seem appropriate for the Courier to feature articles and stories about them in the coming year.
